

DISCOVERING ATLAS · OFFLINE GUIDE

Iguazú Falls

A Family Code · A Signal Required

Argentina & Brazil

Before You Go

Iguazú Falls straddles the Argentina/Brazil border. Most travelers need two full park days, not one — the Argentine side gets you close (walkways above and beside the water, including the Devil's Throat), while the Brazilian side gives you the wide panoramic view of the whole falls system. Skipping either means missing half the story.

Practical basics

Best time to visit	Year-round; water volume highest Nov-Mar (wetter season)
Minimum time needed	2 full days (1 per country side)
Currency	Argentine Peso / Brazilian Real
Border crossing	Check visa requirements for Brazil well ahead of time
Nearest airports	Puerto Iguazú (Argentina), Foz do Iguaçu (Brazil)

Pacing It With Kids

The boardwalks are long, hot, and thrilling for a while before they become just long and hot. Split each day into a morning session at the falls and an afternoon doing something different. The boat ride under the falls is the best mid-trip energy reset if your child is up for getting soaked — book it for day one, not day two, since it works better as an opener than a finale when everyone's tired.

Suggested 2-day flow

Day 1 — Argentina side	Morning: upper/lower circuits. Midday: boat ride. Afternoon: rest, easy walk.
Day 2 — Brazil side	Morning: panoramic walkway. Midday: border crossing logistics. Afternoon: free time.

Vegetarian & Family Dining

Vegetarian options exist but aren't always obvious on menus in this region — look for parrilla (grill) restaurants with clearly marked vegetable-forward sides, and don't hesitate to ask directly; it's a normal question locally. Empanadas de verdura (vegetable empanadas) are a reliable, kid-friendly option available almost everywhere.

Use the live Veg Finder tool at discoveringatlas.com for current listings before you go — restaurants change, this offline guide can't.

Emergency Info & Key Phrases

Emergency numbers

Argentina: 911 | Brazil: 190 (police) / 192 (ambulance)

Useful Spanish phrases (Argentina side)

¿Dónde está el baño?	Where is the bathroom?
Soy vegetariano/a	I am vegetarian
¿Cuánto cuesta?	How much does it cost?
Necesito ayuda	I need help
¿Habla inglés?	Do you speak English?

For live translation with pronunciation, use the Language Tool at discoveringatlas.com when you have signal.

Safe travels.

More free tools and guides at discoveringatlas.com